Your strategy? The main thing to avoid is selecting an attack on the head just when it retreats. It's because of this it's best to just go with one attack for each character in one period of 10 seconds. When you can move, make your generic Imperial soldiers attack with a Beam-class attack and the mysterious girl use Magitek Missile.

If you want to avoid any battles (Which is okay, even if you're trying to build up your bestiary in the Final Fantasy VI: Advance version, because there will be nothing here you haven't seen before), move quickly down to the northern edge of the southernmost rock, and wait there. After a moment, you will be presented with an opportunity to squeeze between two guard groups to the east, and then you should be able to wait there until a path opens up in the west, backtrack, and then head south ...

Final Fantasy VII is undeniably one of the best games ever made. It is one of my favorite games and the one I enjoyed most in the series, but to be fair, I haven't played Final Fantasy VI (which many fans of the Final Fantasy series claim to be the best title in the franchise). Putting aside the back-and-forth over which of the two games is ...
